At the station, officers and prisoners were placed immediately in a seven-tion, no matter how difficult, and put into the music all the expression of the Bartram at the wheel. W. G. Bald-win, H. Lucas and Oscar Mundy win, H. H. Lucas and Oscar Mundy you por win, H. H. Lucas and Oscar Mundy brought the prisoners here, and after Allen, Edwards and Miss Iroler had been put in the car, the detectives got in and the party was driven to the Baldwin Agency.

Here the prisoners and officers and Miss Iroler hurried up the stairs to the third story. The handcuffs were then taken off them and they were allowed to walk about the offices. Soon after this arrival Sidna Alien asked to be allowed to write a letter to his wife out in Carroll County. Mr. Beldwin readily agreed, and the prisoner wrote quite a lengthy epistic. While writing the letter, the first he has written since he left Carroll he says, he wept, and several times used his handkerchief to wipe away the tears.

Sidna, when asked for an interview; said that he had told pretty much everything there was to tell.
"Have you secured counsel as yet?" Sidna was asked.
"No, sir. I have not secured a lawyer yet. I have not had time, nor do I know yet who will represent me," replied Allen.

"Will Mr. J. C. Buxton, your attoracy in Mount Airy, represent you?"

southern mountaineer that it is a wonder nobody in Des Moines suspected him.

Wesley Edwards is more modern and more of the outside world. He answers questions without the mountain heaitation, or cautien, or weighing of words, and seems to see any humorous possibility quick as a flash. He is lively and bright and his language is clean cut, comparatively, and his words come readily and are well words. Miss Iroler gives evidence in her conversation of little mingling with the outside world. Pronunciation.

Farmers through jobbers in the Pacific coast States and through general agents in other States, he said, were divided into five districts, the central district being Northern Illinois, Northern Indians and Eastern Iowa, and the eastern division took in New York, Pennsylvania, part of Ohio and Michigan.

Edward P. Grosvenor, special assistant to the Attorney-General, appeared for the government. He amounced that the Chicago hearing is one of several to be held in various cities.

The defendants include George W Perking, Cyrus H McCormick, Eibert H, Wesley would have nothing to say, but his smile was knowing and significant.

While he was talking, one of the Baldwins approached and Wesley asked if he might be permitted to have a farewell talk with Miss Iroler before he was taken to Jail.

For twenty minutes the two people conversed in low tones, and both seemed delighted at the idea of being able to talk to one another again, Wesley was saked whether he had made all the arrangements for his wedding prior to his arrest on Saturday. He said that he had not. He expected Miss Iroler to come, but had not completed arrangements. In speaking of the fight he put up on the street car in Des Moines just prior to his arrest, he said: "I was mighty sorry that I skinned Mr. Baldwin's arm up, but you know that was calculated to excite a fellow, and I just could not help attempting to make the dash." Sidna Allen has the same tones and accent as those of his family. His voice as in the case with most of the mountaineers is rather low-pitched and he speaks with a quiet, deliberate the fact in the claim. They will be kept here until the time for their trials.

He appeared with records of the company's business.

Mr. Funk said that he became general manager in 1906 and had been associated with Cyrus H. McCormick, president of the corporation, since 1904. He had begun as a salesman at Springfield, Ohio. At present, he said, he had charge of the sales department.

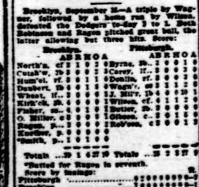

Mr. Funk testified that prior to the combination of the large harvester companies in 1902 they all were active competitors, but he took no part in the negotiations for combining. The general agencies of all the companies were turned over to the new organization, he

It is expected that the Red and Blue armies will clash to-morrow. By that time King George will have reached the scene of operations and all the military attaches, including the American officers, will have taken the field.
